

I am very upset about Sinclair Broadcasting forcing all their stations to pre-empt regular programming to further their own political ends.

One company should not be allowed to take over the public airwaves in this way. If they are going to air opinion pieces, they should at least present the other perspective, and play the "Going Upriver" documentary which, unlike the piece Sinclair is airing, is not an attack ad.

Sinclair is a glaring example of the negativity that has become so pervasive in the media these days. I certainly hope the FCC will act to discourage such politicization of the public airwaves. Television is supposed to be for everyone, not just for those supporting the current administration. And television should not be used by the current administration to try to brainwash the public.

Diversity in media is as important now as it ever was. I hope the FCC will work hard in the future to strengthen the rules on media consolidation. If there is only one view represented on television and radio, then our first amendment means nothing.

Thank you.
